Alexandra is a member of our Restructuring and Litigation practice groups. She initially joined the firm as a summer student, after which she returned to complete her articles. Alexandra has worked alongside TGF lawyers on a range of restructuring and commercial litigation matters and is often commended for her strong analytical skills and attention to detail.

Alexandra graduated from Osgoode Hall Law School, where she honed her advocacy skills through her clinical work and mooting experiences. She served as a student caseworker with Parkdale Community Legal Services, a pro bono legal clinic, assisting individuals facing immigration and citizenship challenges. She also volunteered with the Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic, advocating for reforms to strengthen legal protections and supports for survivors of gender-based violence.

Prior to law school, Alexandra earned her Bachelor of Arts from the University of Toronto. There, she held leadership roles in several student organizations, experiences that strengthened her teamwork and problem-solving skills and continued to shape her approach to legal practice.
